The superwomen we cannot live without

Nannies shortlisted for award to recognise the vital role they play

Whether jumping into a swimming pool to rescue a child, helping a single mother raise her family or caring for sick kids, nannies are crucial to many households across the country.

And this weekend, the most dedicated and hardest working will be honoured at a ceremony designed to recognise the role they play.

More than 200 nannies were nominated by their employers for the Best Nanny Award and attracted more than 100,000 votes.

Now, the list has been shortened to a group of 20 Mary Poppins figures who will go before a panel of judges this weekend for the title of Best Nanny.

organisation, which aims to provide further opportunities for domestic workers, founded the award and said her group was taken aback by the response.

She said: "We were told that there weren't enough people that would even care, but from the minute we posted the awards, we had tens of people applying daily."

"What we found is that people really care about their nannies, about supporting them, and their children, and families."
